ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH

Issues, Challenges and Strategies for Sustainable Development and Livelihood Security

THE CONFERENCE

Environment and economy are interdependent and need each other, which aim at increasing the production of goods and services to meet the needs of a rising population, along with the population explosion, affluent consumption and production have placed a huge stress on the environment. Soil erosion, thinning of ozone layer, increasing pollution of air, soil and water, intensified natural calamities due to climate change, destruction of natural habitats, loss of biodiversity, natural resources depletion, inadequate sanitation and agricultural land degradation are the major issues. Environmental research is a multidisciplinary area which encompasses anthropogenic issues of global relevance and applicability, from air and water quality to climate change. Hence, development that ignores its repercussions on the environment will destroy the environment that sustains life forms. The term "sustainable development" was coined in the eighties of the twentieth century, which is about human connections and impacts on the environment and vice versa, emphasizing the social, economic, and environmental spheres could not be separated and is the economic development process that seeks to satisfy the requirements of the present generation without affecting the needs of future generations. Promotion of natural resources, conservation, preserving regenerative capacity of ecological system and avoiding the imposition of environmental risks on future generations would lead to sustainable development. Along with this security could be achieved when the people aware of impacts of anthropogenic activities, importance of living with nature while getting back the traditional practices and knowledge of working together constantly to reduce the carbon footprint. Hence, this conference brings the connection of researchers from environment field which gifts the knowledge of wide aspects from remote sensing to major environmental issues and strategies which combat them with sustainable approaches that can ensure livelihood security.
